Programmed to Hate America

The Left's revolution depends on a pervasive program of "re-education"

By Marilyn M. Brannan, Associate Editor, IRNUSA News

Over the past forty or fifty years, we have seen in our government-run schools an escalating agenda to rewrite American history—dismissing the value of our founding documents, denigrating the wisdom and faith of our Founders, and denying the significance of America's heritage as a free nation.

Today, the Left is actively fomenting racial tensions and re-opening wounds that were inflicted by the deep injustices of slavery. The revolutionaries among us are now pressing their case for reparations under a new name—redistribution of wealth. The premise of their argument is that the injustices suffered by blacks in this country under slavery and its aftermath have not been satisfactorily redressed—despite the fact that slavery in this nation was ended 145 years ago by a bloody civil war in which over 600,000 Americans died. That, in itself, was a grim form of retribution. And to that we must add the suffering of the civilian populace, the economic destruction, and the generations of bitterness that ensued as an entire nation paid a terrible price for the sin of slavery.

The next century saw the emergence of the Civil Rights Movement; and at long last, Congress passed the Civil Rights Act in 1964. Although long delayed, it was, nevertheless, an expression of the will of the American People—a hands-on demonstration of our collective commitment to the principle of freedom and justice for every American.

The Dream—or the Nightmare?

Most of us recognize that reconciliation has the powerful potential to heal the wounds of injustice and knit our society together as a strong, productive nation. Without the manufactured rancor that serves base political purposes—and without the festering corruption in government that destroys hope and obliterates incentive—opportunity and justice for every American could flow once again, inspired by the liberating principles of our founding documents.

At this critical point in our battle over what values we will embrace as a nation as we move toward the future, we need to remember that "retribution" is a two-sided coin: justice on the one side, vengeance on the other. Must America forever struggle to right what can realistically never be fully righted? How long must the wounds bleed?

If the American people do not collectively reject the premise that we must forever be divided by race because of past injustices—and if we do not come together united in a commitment to one another as fellow Americans, there will be a terrible cost yet to be paid. And it will reach into the lives of all of us.

But it is clear that the revolutionaries among us—many of whom are highly placed, influential members of the Obama administration—are not interested in racial reconciliation. Even after a century-and-a-half, the Left cling with a bitter ferocity to the issue of slavery because it is a powerful tool for pressing on to their dream of a "transformed America." We need to remember that the word dream also has two faces: the uplifting, edifying dream of transformation under the Hand of the Creator—or the nightmare of Man's pride and lust for power. Saul Alinsky, the consummate community organizer and Barack Obama's ideological mentor, revealed the motivation for the latter [dream] when he wrote: "The organizer is in a true sense reaching for the highest level for which man can reach—to create, to be a 'great creator,' to play God."<sup>1</sup>

Strategy: Capture the Youth

The ancient strategy of “divide and conquer”—exploiting anger and division between races and classes—is classic Saul Alinsky teaching. He wrote, “The first step in community organization is community disorganization. . . . An organizer must stir up dissatisfaction and discontent; provide a channel into which the people can angrily pour their frustrations.”<sup>2</sup>

Extrapolate those principles from community to the larger society, and it is clear that these tactics are being aggressively implemented today at all levels of the Obama administration and throughout our society wherever the Left is in control. Unfortunately, that includes our government-run schools, from kindergarten through our state-run universities.

Our youth are being programmed to hold America in contempt for a long list of enumerated failures (both real and contrived) while viewing Marxist theory as a panacea for every social problem that confronts us as a nation—many of which problems have been created by the kind of thinking promoted by the Left.

Another revelation from Saul Alinsky states, “Our rebels have contemptuously rejected the values and way of life of the [American] middle class. They have stigmatized it as materialistic, decadent, bourgeois, degenerate, imperialistic, war-mongering, brutalized, and corrupt.”<sup>3</sup>

But, recognizing that it was through the middle class that the ideology of the Left would be implemented, he wrote, “. . . the power and the people are in the big middle-class majority.”<sup>4</sup>

And what is the most available, powerful institution for re-programming American thought in this “big middle-class majority”? Our state-run schools. Leftists, such as former domestic terrorist William Ayers (now comfortably ensconced as professor of education at the University of Illinois in Chicago), have spent their lives vilifying our American way of life because they hate America. And you and I are paying for this poisonous propaganda to be taught in our schools to our children.

Our textbooks have been in a constant state of revision over many decades to construct a “new” history of America that will no longer reflect the views of our Founders, nor the uniquely American traditions that have evolved over many generations as the poor and the oppressed from around the world have sought freedom and opportunity in a new land: America. The very mention has brought hope to countless millions who have been willing to abandon the places of their birth and trust in the promise of a new and better life.

But, in order for Barack Obama’s “fundamental transformation of America” to occur, that image of hope must be extinguished. There must be, instead, an enemy—“a channel into which the people can angrily pour their frustrations.” That “channel” is contempt—even hatred—for America and it is being programmed into our youth through our education system.

With the Left in control of the White House and both houses of Congress, President Obama is using executive power and stimulus money, bypassing Congress completely, to impose a Marxist worldview through the Department of Education.<sup>5</sup>

We have already seen the damage done to our system of education by liberals who believe it is better to emphasize “self-esteem” and promote sex education than to teach American history. It doesn’t take much imagination to envision the “re-programming” our youth will be exposed to under the “standardized” national curriculum envisioned by Barack Obama and his fellow revolutionaries.

God help us.
